November 23, 2017 |

Briefs

An Economy for Everyone: The case for a $15 minimum wage

It is well documented that high rates of poverty undermine economic stability, and that low wages have a negative impact on working people, their families, and communities.
In short, we all pay the price when a significant number of working people are earning poverty wages.

We must turn this trend around.

By taking the necessary steps to lift British Columbians out of poverty we can start building an economy that truly works for everyone.

Read the full submission.